Dear Sir/Madam,

I disagree with the settlement proposed in the Microsoft anti-trust case. I feel that the lack of serious punishment only encourages the company to continue with its anti-competitive behavior. In addition, there is no means of enforcement spelled out, leaving the company free to find new ways to lock out competitors.

If the wheels of justice were swift this would not be an issue, but this is generally not the case - Microsoft has been able to continue with its behavior even during the ongoing legal proceedings against it!

I hope you reconsider and attempt to strengthen any settlement with the company.

Sincerely,
Rob Hagopian
